Course Description:

The course begins with an examination of the (alleged) antecedents to Unitarianism and Universalism in pre-Reformation Europe. We move on to trace the theological and then institutional emergence of Unitarianism out of the Radical Reformation. The Unitarian churches in Poland, Transylvania, and England will be considered in detail with attention to issues of sameness and difference in their development and declines. Special focus will be given to the relationship of these communities to their Jewish and Islamic contemporaries. We will also look at the universalism of 18th century England, and the current state of Unitarianism in Europe. Then we cross the ocean to examine the emergence of Unitarianism from developments within Puritan Congregationalism. We explore the uniquely North American institution of Universalism as response to the same cultural setting. Next: the major themes and developments of North American Unitarianism through its classical age, the Transcendentalist development, and the various crises of identity and purpose that develop into and through the late 19th and 20th centuries. Then we turn our attention to Universalist ascendancy, decline, and then consolidation with Unitarianism (perhaps the most misunderstood aspect of Unitarian/Universalist history). Careful attention will be paid throughout to the Unitarian/Universalist social location in relationship to class, race, and gender identities, and how these sometimes enabled and sometimes impaired social justice advances.

Required Readings

These need to be read before arriving for class:

David Robinson, The Unitarians and the Universalists (1985), Chapters 2-12.

Due to the expense of this book, I have made it available online at this link:

www.nuuc.org/RobinsonU&U

Charles Howe, For Faith and Freedom: A Short History of Unitarianism in Europe (1997)

Available for purchase at the UUA bookstore for only $16—it is listed at Amazon for $35-$99!! Here is the link:

Ross, Warren, The Premise and the Promise (2001)

Available for purchase at the UUA bookstore for $24—listed at Amazon for hugely more than that

Assignments

Will include vigorous and appropriate participation in class discussions, and one final project due 4 week after the conclusion of our intensive class which is your choice of the following:

The Gifts of History

In eight to ten pages of double spaced type, describe a problem or controversy currently experienced within the Unitarian Universalist movement and what historical influences inform that controversy. First outline your problem or controversy. Then describe the historical background that leads to the current situation. Finally: suggest a historical resource that might help alleviate the problem. For example, your current controversy might be Unitarian Universalist congregations that are reluctant to grow. You might trace this to the anti-evangelical roots of American Unitarianism. You could then suggest the growth strategies of the Eliot administrations as a corrective. The goal of this paper is to demonstrate that you can apply historical information to a current problem in a constructive fashion.

Your Personal Ministry

In eight to ten pages of double spaced type, demonstrate that you understand how it is that history informs the religious leadership that you would chose for yourself. First describe your ministry: either the ministry in which you engage now, or the ministry to which you aspire. Then explain what historical precedence there is for your chosen form of ministry in our Unitarian Universalist tradition. For example, perhaps you see your ministry to be work with the mentally ill. What precedence is there for this in our history? How is that history helpful? What are the historical barriers to working with that population as a Unitarian Universalist? Perhaps you want a traditional parish ministry. In that case, what kind of a parish minister will you be? Will you be an Emersonian—someone who see the job of minister as interpretation? Or are you closer to Theodore Parker, and his ministry of social justice? Upon which historical influences will you draw in your ministry?
